

Bear Poaching

Background

An ongoing poaching problem has plagued Alaska's bears for far too long. As an example, three years ago, seven bears were killed in Katmai National Park.

What AWA Has Done

The Alaska Wildlife Alliance persisted with a 2-year campaign to bring justice for these senselessly slaughtered human tolerant bears, ultimately resulting in prosecution and conviction of the two perpetrators and sentencing in Federal court.

In a more recent poaching incident, the Alaska Wildlife Alliance has offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible. This is a part of the Alaska Wildlife Alliance's ongoing commitment to the protection of all of Alaska's wildlife.

What You Can Do Donate!

Anyone wishing to donate to a reward fund, is encouraged to contact us and work out details for this specified use of badly needed funding.

Information Needed!

Any information you may have relative to any Alaska wildlife poaching incidents will be handled effectively by AWA's executive director, who has an extensive background in law enforcement investigation. Please email John Toppenberg at john@akwildlife.org with any information you have.
